de Nowberg. The beam in the centre is enriched with a large bose and an earl's coronet, embosoming the arms of the late earl. From this hangs an appropriate gasalier. The floor was made in Venice in 1881, and is of highly polished red and white marthe, from quarries near Verona. The walls are, or were, winscotted with oak, and hung with ancient armor of various periods and with the antiers of the rein and moose doer. Over the fire place could be seen a wind-dial, and opposite it a rich and complete auit of seel armor, over which is suspended the helmet, stonded with brans, usually worn by Cromwell; and on either side I saw curious and early specimens of firearms.

Near the east window is the doublet in which Lord Brooke was killed at Litchield in 1645.

There are three large and beautiful sothic windows on the side toward the iver. In one of the recesses of the winon which stands a boldly carved antique My in'siligent and courteous guide took from this place with fine effect, hanging at the end of the chapel passage, the celebrated painting by Vandyck of Charles I., and for which Sir Joshua Beynolds is said to have effered five hundred guineas. Near the cast window stands the exquisite carving of the Battle of the America, after the painting by Rubens. This is surely a work of art, as also of years in execution.

You enter the great hall from the inner court by a flight of stone steps under a Gothic porch. It is sixty-two feet long and forty feet in breadth. The roof is richly ornamented Gothic, of wood, and in the spandrals you will see carved the bear and regged staff; the moulding is ornamented with the coronet and shield, in which are embiazoned the arms of the successive earls from the time of Henry de Newberg.
